MARSHAL M'MAHON, DUKE OF MAGENTA.

It would appear that this distinguished officer, who was in command of the second corps of the army of the Alps, has won the chief honor of the battle of Magenta, for we find that the Emperor has bestowed upon him in Sutton, the defendant in this attachment, so absconds or the field of fame the baton of a Marshal of France and said attachment, or judgment pro confesso will be taken as to him.

As his name imports, he is of Irish extraction, and has well upheld the character for dash and intrepidity which soldiers of that race have won for themselves in the military service of every country in the world. Since 1841, when he commanded a battalion of chasseurs, General McMahon has been almost constantly in the field. The soldiers love him, believe in him, and will follow him with confidence across and the spirit of a brave soldier. Esprit-Charles-Marie Espinasse, who is among the killed, was a graduate of the school of St. Cyr. Born in the village of Saissac, April 2, 1815, during the "Hundred Days." He left the school in 1833, and won his first steps in Algeria. As Chief de Battallion he fought in 1845 at the head of the Zouaves; and in 1849 commanded the Forty-second of the Line at the siege of Rome. He was most active in suppressing the insurrections of December, 1851, and devoted himself to the cause of the President and of public order. Immediately on the proclamation of the Empire, he became an aid-de-camp of the Emperor. In the Crimea he fought gallantly by the side of the Sardinians at Tchernaya, and was one of the first to follow General McMahon into the Malakoff. When Paris was shocked and excited by the Orsini affair in January, 1858, Gen. Espinasse was made Minister of Public Safety in the place of M. Billault. Although this disappointment caused much alarm and concern as an invasion of the civil service by a military man, General Espinasse administered his office with commendable moderation; and when he made way for a more liberal system in the person of M. Delangle, became a Senator of the Empire.

GENERAL FOREY. The battle of Montebello, the first fight in the Italian campaign, was won by the troops of the Forey brigade, which formed part of the first division of the army, under the command of Marshal Baraguay d'Hilliers. At this battle Forey showed himself such a brave and gallant officer that the Emperor, when he visited the field embraced him and publicly thanked him for the victory he had won. He has now, it would seem, distinguished himself as highly in the battle of Magenta; and it is not a matter of surprise that he has been promoted to the command of the division in which he served. We are told that General Baraguay d'Hilliers has been superceded by him in command of the first corps of the army. Gen. Forey, as almost all the general officers of the French army, distinguished himself in Africa, where he served for ten years as Colonel of the twenty-sixth regiment. He commanded a brigade in Paris on the occasion of the coup d'etat, and was the head of the column of troops who escorted the members of the Nation-Taylor's Bridge, Sampson Co., N.
